

Here's what Wives say about the Spectacular Marriage conference:

Fun but informative! Projects were really helpful in springboarding deeper discussions.

Real life examples shared and practical applications given.

The projects/discussions with each other on the topics and questions.

I liked the projects that you were able to discuss with your mate because you could truly see how they were thinking and feeling.

It brought up a lot of issues that I have in our own marriage.

Helped me realize that my weaknesses are a gift to him from God.

The conference really helped me realize areas that I necessarily did not think were "problems."

The humor in the relationship of a husband and wife – it showed me how different we are.

Honestly, truth from the word. The series wasn't "sugar coated" for the men or the women. Explained each role specifically.

It was fun and enlightening on some levels.

Practical application of God's principles for marriage.

Insightful.

Practical.

I enjoyed everything. It was fun and interesting.

He was comical.

Questions revealed issues to confront, but enough humor to diffuse potential explosions.

It reiterated to me that what a great marriage we have and how much fun we're having!

Hearing Mr. Lankford describe men, women, and marriage and realizing some of our own issues and conflicts are common to other couples.

I loved learning about how differences could be so positive – how to resolve conflict – I like the videos/skits!

The differences in male and female and how we can effectively grow to become more intimate.

Of all the things I learned at Spectacular Marriage, the thing that jumps out is:

To thank God for his weaknesses. That's why he (my husband) needs me.

The need to have a plan and purpose for our marriage and family and differences and conflict are good.

After many years of marriage, these are still problems (opportunities) to address.

Embrace the differences.

We're different!

Straightforward.

"My mate is not my enemy;" accept their differences and thank God for them instead of dwelling on them.

We need to develop a "plan" for our marriage.

Embracing my spouse's weaknesses.

The one thing I've always struggled with...respecting my husband. I fear letting him lead because I have a problem controlling most things in our lives.

How the situations depicted resembled our marriage and how we're not alone in conflicts within our marriage.

That I need to communicate more openly and honestly with my spouse.

Weaknesses being a blessing.

We need to be seeking God more in our relationship.

How we need to have more fun together as a couple. I thought we were but realize we could do a lot better at our date planning than just dinner!

Crucifying yourself in marriage is painful, we need a plan for our marriage instead of just "living."

How I really feel about things. What I can do to speak more kindly.

If I were inviting a friend to Spectacular Marriage, I would tell them:

That it brings out real life issues and discusses them.

It's worth the time and effort to come.

That it was great! Not too long (short sessions) and had pertinent and very helpful information. It's also nice to see other couples who apparently experience similar issues and conflicts as we do. It's comforting to know that we aren't alone!

That I recommend it because it shows you the way to a spectacular marriage.

It's really fun – great jump start: to building a better marriage or to revive one. Building a better marriage with Christian principles and foundation.

It is definitely worth the time and expense. It was great!

It was very fun and informative – Also very helpful in teaching us to resolve conflict.

It's a great way to improve and encourage your relationship with God and your spouse.

It was fun and great for young couples.

They will receive a blessing and many practical ideas for becoming "one" with their spouse.

To come, they will hear some valuable information.

Try to attend, and have an open mind.

That it has a lot of information, for helping even good marriages be even better.

It's fun and you take away such good ideas that you can actually use to grow more intimate.

It will really help their marriage be better!
